Evolution of the globalization process is closely connected with a separation of free-standing and independent macro-regions of North America, Asia-Pacific and Europe. Despite their narrow and intense mutual economic and political contacts in the process of globalization, each of them try to defend the interests of its own members. The European Commission has expressed its intentions and interests in New business strategy, introduced in November 2010. This paper shows an example of protection of EU interests in the form of price dumping and anti-dumping measures, whereby the two macro-regions (European and Asia-Pacific) trying to find solutions to some of their internal economic problems.
